Dr. Carolyn Callahan Director of the School of The University of Memphis

Dr. Carolyn Callahan is a pioneer in Accounting as she is the first African American woman to be a Director of the School of Accountancy at a doctoral granting institution, University of Memphis. She is also a founding member of The PhD Project Accounting Doctoral Students Association. She leaves behind her post as the Doris M. Cook Accounting Professor in the Sam M. Walton College of Business at the University of Arkansas. Dr. Callahan is blazing the trail yet again. She has nurtured many doctoral students as they endeavor to reach their goals as business professors.

The PhD Project is very happy and extremely grateful that individuals such as Dr. Carolyn Callahan continue in their efforts to diversify corporate America, provide a nurturing support network to others, but most importantly continue to be an integral part of The PhD Project.
